

The only thing that really changed about me throughout my high school years is that I read more, study more, & I take it more seriously. However, AHS didn't inspire me to do any of these things, I just did it because I want to get out of high school, leave this state, & have a great life. I'm not really comfortable being around tons of people my age or younger than I, since everyone was older than I was since I was a kid. Usually when I'm in school I feel like there's something holding me back from my true self & I dislike this feeling so I need to graduate soon. This doesn't only apply to AHS but every school I attended.

The moment I get off the bus I usually take a nap & go out or change clothes & go out. I thought maybe because it's early that I feel like this but I discovered ~~this~~ <sup>the</sup> pass summer that wasn't the case. I started my first job this summer & it was hard but I wasn't feeling the same way as I felt in school, even though I woke up at the same time I'd usually wake for school. At my job everything was swell & some days I worked from 8 am to 1 p.m. & would still have energy to go out after a shower. It was a great summer, probably one of the best ones so far.

When I have my children, & if they feel the same way about school as I, I'm taking them out & getting them home schooled. Either that or I'll put them in military school, I hope the Air Force will be a great choice for me. This essay went off topic a lot but I have nothing positive or negative to say about AHS.

School didn't change me one bit, most of the time if a teacher(s) isn't talking to me individually or as class/group as a whole, I'm not listening, I'm either day-dreaming or thinking. That goes for students as well, I'm glad I leave at 12:00 but it'll be better when I graduate so I never have to come back, & finally that's another why I don't want to walk for graduation, I'd rather get my diploma in the mail.
