

The first thing that will take away from my high school experience with me is doing what you have to do, even if you don't want to. I take this life lesson with me because in my earlier years of high school, I did what I wanted; not giving a damn and a lot of consequences came with that. I was given detentions, in-school suspensions, and write-ups everyday for / because doing what I wanted. You not just going to get a job and not listen to your boss's rules, most likely your going to get fired. Now, this lesson, trust, I learned the hard way; I just didn't want to listen to nobody other than myself, but I grew up because I knew high school wasn't going to wait for me to get it together.

Another life lesson I am going to take with me is you can make friends but not everyone is going to be your real friends. I came to Ansonia High School
