

In my 6 years of being in this school, I learned that $2y+x=b$. Like I really didn't learn anything I didn't already know. But one thing I did learn that you have to stay social but keep time for your self to succeed further. No one in the unless you want to be a teacher or something relating finance. is going to have use anything they taught you in high school. I ask high school graduates from this school daily, "What have you learned from this high school?" and they say, "Nothing that I am using now".

To me that is true. But one thing I can take away with me when I leave this school is keep your friend close and your enemy's closer. Only cause you don't know who your going to need in life. At sometimes I wish I would have went to a tech school but those schools now a days are filled with drama and drug addicts. So I further my education in what I really want to do in life which is Barbering.

Schools need to focus on helping students with things that really matter. also help student do things they want to do or be in life. But I am not going to talk down upon the school be academichly I learned nothing I didn't already know. I will always remember the teachers that actually help and didn't just give me a paper and then say, "It's do at the end of class"; and don't even help.
