

What I take with me that I learned from AHS is to not trust as much of the people that you thought you can. I say this because in high school a hand full of people have gone behind my back and have said horrible things about me. Some of these things were not even true. So I learned not to trust someone so quickly. I found yours better kept to yourself.

What I also learned is to not slack your freshman year. You may think your freshman year is not important because you have the next 3 years to catch up but that's not how it works. You pay for it at the end because you lose credits if you fail classes. And it's very hard to work for those credits in the long run. You have to work hard.

Another thing I have learned is to not get yourself involved in drama. It can get in the way of your school work and make you not focus. You really wanna stay out of it. Plus you will have more friends if you do. And it's not worth it.
